FORMOBILE

Call for Training Participants

Aims

A key aim of FORMOBILE is to develop a novel curriculum that is developed for law enforcement. The curriculum will address a range of stakeholders (e.g. from first responders through to mobile forensic experts) in the tackle to fight serious crimes. The training will be didactically structured and include novel concepts and approaches taking into consideration differing knowledge bases and will cover the investigation process from crime scene to court.

Trainers

Who we need? We require stakeholders who are experienced with mobile forensic investigations to become trainers and to run the pilot courses.

Our Aims? The project aims to pilot a train the trainer course to deliver a series of pilot courses to law enforcement participants.

What is the benefit for you, I hear you say?

- early access to the final course materials
- possible commentary in the development of the content
- your own professional development
- contributing to quality assurance in mobile forensics
- and more

Why we need you!

We require stakeholders from all target groups (first responders, analysts, experts, investigators, prosecution, judges, and management) to participate in the training either as trainers or as students on the pilot training courses.

Trainers and participant will be involved in:

- the evaluation of the efficacy of the training
- assessing the best practices, standards, and tools devised
- have an impact on the delivery of a knowledge base in mobile forensics for law enforcement officials

We aim for the final training materials to be made available for law enforcement, relevant non-profit organisations and academia.

Participants

Who we need? Professionals from all target groups to participate in the training pilots as students.

Our Aims? To pilot a series of courses to law enforcement participants that cover important base knowledge required to conduct mobile forensic investigations.

What is the benefit for you, I hear you say?

- your own professional development
- evaluation of the content and courses before final release
- knowledge of good practice in Europe for mobile forensics
- implementation of the training in your organisation
- a unique opportunity to discuss mobile forensics with various stakeholder groups
- and more
